How a Woman’s Right to Vote Came Down to a Son’s Love for His Mama

Jennifer Kleier and Delores “Dee” Pregliasco

August 26, 2020 will mark the 100-year anniversary of the adoption of the 19th Amendment. The Amendment guarantees that the right of citizens to vote shall not be abridged by the states or federal government on the basis of sex. It was the culmination of a long and tumultuous fight by both fearless female suffragists and their male allies.

The movement struggled to gain traction and focus, causing historian Nancy Wolloch to describe early suffragists’ efforts as “a crusade in political education by women and for women, and for most of its existence, a crusade in search of a constituency.” (1994) Women and the American Experience. New York: McGraw-Hill, Inc.

Long before the passage of the 19th Amendment, women had either limited or full rights to vote in several states and territories. In rural areas of Kentucky, women who were head of household and paid taxes were granted the right to vote on tax and education issues in 1838. In 1894 women won school suffrage in Lexington, Covington and Newport. Although the Kentucky legislature took away these rights from 1902–1912, Kentucky women were always very active in the suffragist movement.

Virginia Penny of Louisville became Vice President of The Equal Rights Association in 1867. Mary Barr Clay of Richmond, daughter of abolitionist Cassius M. Clay, served as the Vice President of the National Woman’s Suffrage Association (NWSA) and became very vocal in its support of the war. (Continued on next page)

The Senate quickly passed the measure but it stalled in the House leading to weeks of debate. Anti-suffragists viewed the amendment as a continuation of the Civil War and feared that passage would threaten white supremacy. Josephine Pearson, President of the Tennessee State Association Opposed to Women’s Suffrage, led the fight against the amendment to protect what she saw as the traditional southern way of life. Even many white suffragists had long been wary of allegiances with abolitionists, especially black women, for fear it would undermine the ability to ratify the amendment in Southern states. Cohen, J. (2020, May 8). The Mother Who Saved Suffrage: Passing the 19th Amendment.

On August 18, 1920 the Amendment was finally called to a vote in the Tennessee House. Harry Burns, a 24-year-old senator, cast the deciding vote. Pinned to his lapel was a red rose, signifying his opposition to the amendment. In his hand he clutched a note from his mother, a woman by the name of Phoebe Ensminger Burn, known to her friends as Miss Febb. The note read, in part, “Hurrah and vote for suffrage. Don’t keep them in doubt…Be a good boy and help Mrs. Catt put the ‘rat’ in ratification. With lots of love, Mama.”

After shocking the room with his vote, Henry ran for safety and hid from the angry crowd. It was said that “he invoked the fury of his red rose carrying peers while presumably avoiding that of his mother—which may very well have been the more daunting of the two.” Henry later defended his vote by saying “I know that a mother’s advice is always safest for her boy to follow and my mother wanted me to vote for ratification” Cohen, J. (2020, May 8). The Mother Who Saved Suffrage: Passing the 19th Amendment.

On August 26, 1920, Bainbridge Colby, then Secretary of State, certified the ratification and the 19th Amendment became law. Tennessee ratifying the Amendment in the summer of 1920 allowed approximately 1/3 of eligible women to cast their vote in the presidential election in November of that year. The Republican Senator of Ohio, Warren G. Harding, defeated the Ohio Democratic Governor, James M. Cox, to become the 29th President of the United States. Dubois, E. (2020, March 27). August 26th, now known as Women’s Equality Day, is an opportunity to celebrate and reflect on the strides we have made towards achieving gender equality. More importantly though, it’s a day to evaluate opportunities in our lives to continue the work of those who have gone before us. Some of these may be small, some may be large, some may come to us naturally, some we may have to actively seek out.

The LBA’s Gender Equity Committee is doing the hard work to create both equity and equality for women in the law and has many opportunities to offer members who would like to make a difference. If you are interested in joining the cause, please contact lanspach@loubar.org. Hurrah!

Jennifer Kleier is a partner at Karem & Kleier Law and chair of the LBA’s Gender Equity Committee. Dee Pregliasco is retired from Pregliasco Straw-Boone, Doherty Banks & Mudd, is a practicing mediator, and an adjunct professor at the Brandeis School of Law. ■

Celebrating 100 Years

The Louisville Bar Association recognizes and honors the 100-year anniversary of the adoption of the 19th Amendment and the achievements of the women who helped secure its passage. To celebrate the anniversary, the LBA has created a page on its website, www.loubar.org, dedicated to honoring this historic achievement. The page includes upcoming webinars, podcasts, videos, articles and exhibits.

The page can be found under the Public Resources tab.
